Coming to my Senses

When you use all your senses, you get a much bigger picture of the world we live in. We used our eyes to look carefully, seeing shapes and patterns in the clouds, similarities between flowers and bugs and just how many different things make up our natural world. If you close your eyes, it makes it easier to hear and separate out the different sounds. We could hear all sorts of different birds as well as the wind blowing through the trees.

With our hands, we felt some natural materials and tried to describe them for our friends to guess. We found lots of imaginative words to describe their textures.

It's hard to distinguish different smells. Some smell sweet and some smell bitter. Some we would like to eat or use as a perfume but others don't smell too great!

Our new garden at Freshwater has started to bear fruit – literally! We got a taste of raspberries, gooseberries, blackcurrants, radishes and lettuce. How delicious!

And we still had time to build, create, role play and explore – the only limit is our imaginations! Respect, resilience, relationships.
